103-107 Oxford Street, Collingwood

Gibsonia was one of the historic Foy and Gibson buildings that occupied Oxford and Cambridge Streets in the 1930's. Two new floors were added to the existed building to produce 11 two storey townhouses with exceptional views of the city and Dandenong Ranges.

A feature preserved by architects were the original steel trusses that spanned the ceilings of many of the apartments. In total there were 33 two bedroom apartments produced with associated security basement car parking.

The apartments were quickly taken up by the public primarily because of the location and individual styling set within a heritage listed building.
